SSM 2034
– an outlook

A word from Mark Branson

For the past ten years, BaFin has been supervising banks in Germany together with the European Central Bank. As a founding member of the Single Supervisory Mechanism (SSM), we are proud to be making a significant contribution to European financial stability.

Supervision has become a collaborative effort. And that is a good thing: we have learned a great deal from each other, and in many ways, our supervisory activities have become even more effective.

We have faced tremendous challenges over the past ten years: Brexit, the Covid crisis, the Russian war of aggression against Ukraine. Nevertheless, the European banking system has proven to be robust.

Common rules are important, but we also need a uniform system of supervision. By establishing the SSM, we have created a level playing field. That strengthens stability and supports competition within Europe.

What have we experienced in the past ten years of the SSM? And what will the next decade have in store? What risks and opportunities will banks and supervisors encounter? We look forward to discussing these questions with you.

It will be my pleasure to welcome you to our conference “SSM 2034 – an outlook”.
